Spotify

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Spotify is a proprietary peer-to-peer^[1] music streaming service that allows instant listening to specific tracks or albums with virtually no buffering delay.^{[2][3]} Music can be browsed by artists, albums or created playlists as well as by direct searches. Although, due to the system's DRM, it is not possible to save the streamed music for use outside the application, a link is provided to allow the listener to directly purchase the material via partner retailers.^[4] The service is currently only available in Sweden, Norway, Finland, the United Kingdom, France and Spain.^[5]

History

Spotify has been developed since 2006 by a team at Spotify AB, Stockholm, Sweden. The company Spotify was founded by Daniel Ek, former CTO of Stardoll, and Martin Lorentzon, co-founder of TradeDoubler, in Stockholm. The headquarters are located in London and research and development is located in Stockholm.^[4] Spotify currently has more than five million users.^[6]

Spotify was launched for public access on 7 October 2008. While free accounts still remained available by invitation only in order to manage the growth rate of the service, the launch meant that paid subscriptions were opened to everyone. At the same time, Spotify also announced licensing deals with many major music labels.^[7]

The first step towards opening free accounts for public without invitation was taken on 10 February 2009 when Spotify opened for free registration in the UK.^[8]
