Qualification

The applicable law for the protection of the geographical indication in Europe is Regulation (EU) 1151/2012 on quality schemes for agricultural products and foodstuffs. The geographical indication of "Pecorino Crotonese DOP" has been recognized as geographical indication under Italian law on December 3, 2014 - "Provvedimento GU Serie Generale n. 294 del 19-12-2014" - Official statement of Pecorino Crotonese DOP registration in Italy". The peculiarity of the farming system, semi-wild, means that the herd is fed mainly with wild flora of the reference area. The characteristic aroma of Pecorino Crotonese depends on certain components, such as terpenes and sesquiterpenes, present in appreciable quantities only in certain plant families, such as graminaceous, cruciferous, umbelliferous, composite and others taken up during grazing. In fodder crops, on the other hand, these compounds are present in low or very low percentages. The presence of these aromatic compounds, linked to these plant families, identifies the area in which the animals have grazed, thus the wild microflora therefore influences the final organoleptic characteristics of Pecorino Crotonese. In addition, the traditional practice of mountaineering protects the sheep or wines from environmental and nutritional stress during the summer heat, preserving the nutritional and aromatic characteristics of the milk. The climate of the area is decisive for the maturing process and contributes to the typical structure of Pecorino Crotonese. The degree of humidity, characteristic of the area, has contributed over centuries to defining the maturing techniques and constitutes an important environmental resource for maturing the cheese. Correct maturing of the product requires a level of humidity that is neither too high, which would risk not drying out the cheese completely, nor too variable, in order to ensure the homogeneity of conditions during the maturing process. The generally constant humidity levels ensure that the maturing of Pecorino Crotonese proceeds gradually, thus giving the product its characteristic physical structure, such as compactness and the absence of holes in the paste. The indissoluble link with the human resources of the area, determined by the cheese-making technique derived from the centuries-old local tradition of master cheesemakers, has made possible to maintain Crotone's reputation for milk processing. The fact that the workforce is almost exclusively family-run, as well as guaranteeing continuity in tradition, testifies the high degree of specialisation and craftsmanship of the production system, which inevitably remains tied to human resources that cannot be found. Specialist skills are particularly important where manual work is involved: from curdling and moulding to the care and control of the cheese during maturation. The use of natural serum or natural grafts from and existing in the production area creates an important microbiological link with the production area. The whey starter derived from local milk guarantees the supply of lactic bacteria typical of the area of origin and therefore, contributes to defining the specificity of the product.
