GEOGRAPHICAL INDICATION DETAILS

Vin du Québec

Indication type

Wine

Goods

Wine.

Territory

The geographical area is located in an area bounded by the Laurentian Mountains to the north, the United States border to the south, Ontario to the west, and the Appalachian Mountains to the east. The geographical area is delineated using an average of the growing degree-days (at 10°C base) accumulated between April 1 and October 31 for the period of 1983 to 2012. The cumulative 10°C base growing degree-days index must be at least 900 degree-days, i.e. the known empirically tested lower limit for growing vines for wine making.

Qualification

Act respecting reserved designations and added-value claims (LARTV) (chapter A-20. 03), provincial law. Quebec wine was recognized and protected as a protected geographical indication by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, by a notice published in the Gazette officielle du Québec on November 17, 2018 (vol 150, no 46). Part I - Quebec wine's most defining characteristic comes from its relationship with winter. Minimal temperatures in the PGI zone during winter can drop anywhere from -25°C to -40°C in the southern and northern parts, respectively. These dips in temperature would damage the structure of the plants if it was not protected. Hybrid and Vitis vinifera grape varieties, which represent the majority of plantings within the PGI zone, require adequate winter protection. The first vines planted by winegrowers were mostly French hybrids. Such vines must be protected in the wintertime. While snow can be a very good insulator when in large enough quantities, its presence is not always a given. This led some innovative winegrowers in the early 80s to successfully test hilling vines in the existing soil. Around 30 cm of soil is enough to ensure that the roots and primary buds are well protected for a gobelet training system. As other training systems (single guyot and double guyot) do not lend themselves well to hilling, a technique for covering vines with a geotextile was successfully tested in the 2000s. Thanks to these winter protection techniques, winegrowers were able to plant hybrid and noble grape varieties and produce the wines that have put the Quebec terroir on the map. As evidenced by Quebec wine's growing national and international renown, such protection techniques were effective in overcoming the hindering effects of winter.
